Volume XI, 1916

Dr. A. F. Watkins

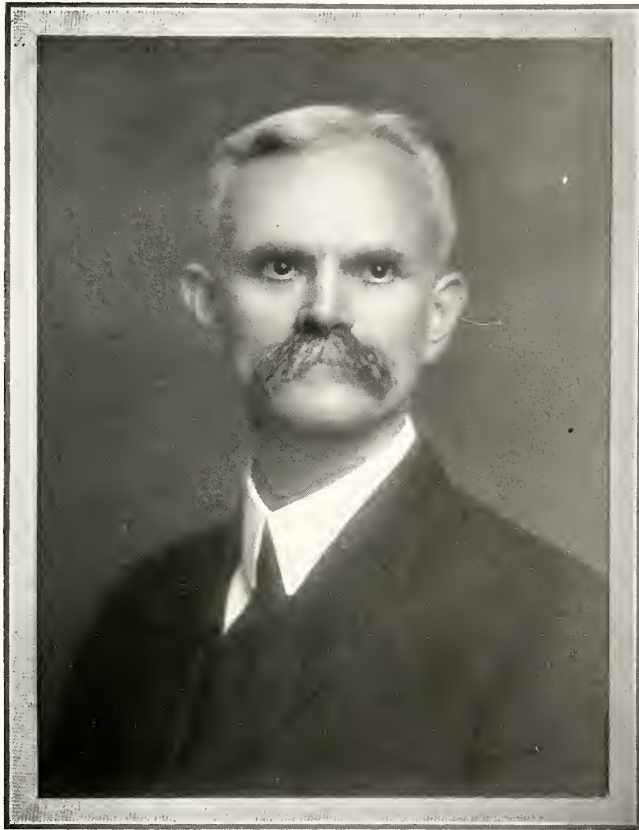

IN the polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, four years is the limit of a pastor's service in one charge. At the end of his quadrennium it may be definitely determined whether or not his work in that charge bids fair to endure. Also, in American colleges four years is a student's generation.

Therefore it is fitting that this Annual of 1916 should be dedicated to the president of Millsaps College, Doctor Alexander Farrar Watkins. The first college generation that has come under his shaping hand now goes out, their academic work ended. He has wrought long enough as the head of Millsaps College for an estimate to be placed upon his work.

It is the opinion of those that are in a position to judge that he has decidedly "made good." Two of the four chief buildings of the college have been rebuilt during his four-year term. The material facilities of the college are far superior to those he found when he began his present work, and his plans, as publicly announced, include the two buildings, a dormitory and a gymnasium, which the college urgently needs. Over half of the present faculty has been chosen on his recommendation. The salaries of the professors have been increased, the curriculum has been revised, and the attendance in the college proper has passed the previous high water mark. The college is coming, under his guidance, to the celebration of its quarter-centennial with assured position and great prospects. In his administration it has become a member of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the South, a recognition accorded to only one other institution in Mississippi.

He has grown steadily with the faculty and students during his four years in his present office, and the dedication of this year's "Bobashela" is a token of the confidence and appreciation of the whole academic body of Millsaps College.

Class Prophecy

(Ten Years Hence)

*'Tis the midnight hour that holds mystical lore
When witches and elves may the future explore.*

O at the midnight hour I stole softly into the glen, where the elves and other woodland sprites dwell. For I had sore need of magical arts and mystical lore, as my classmates, curious and impatient of time, wanted to know what life had in store for them. As I walked I heard little murmurs and low whispers, and finally I called softly to the voices. The Queen of the Woodland Sprites answered my call and asked what I desired. Bowing low, I told her.

She laughed a low silvery laugh that seemed to flow out and join the soft moonlight lying on the ferns and leafy trees. "That is easy, for I have my casket that contains voices of the future, and see, I will open it for you."

As she softly raised the lid a small sweet voice began to tell of a pretty, cheerful home of a Little Minister and his wife. "I am the honeysuckle," it said, "and I grow all over the small white porch where the minister's wife, whom he calls 'Fannie,' sits and sews." I smiled for I could see Fannie Buck sitting on the porch and I could guess why she had planted honeysuckle.

And then came the sweet-scented voice of the rose. "I can tell you of Henrietta. She is very happy and her home as sweet as 'ha(w)thorn' buds that ope in the month of May, for her life as College Professor's wife is a round of receptions and teas."

"Cock-a-doo," and the clarion call of a rooster burst loudly from the casket. "I must tell you of my master. He is very fat and bald and jolly; he laughs and jokes all the time. He is a happy married man. Whenever he passes folks all say 'There goes Ross Capps, the happiest and most prosperous farmer in the country!'"

There was a slight rustling sound, and then, "I-ah-ah have a few words to say," slowly drawled a calm, deliberate voice, "ah- concerning A. W. Garraway. The long-winded arguments of his literary society especially fitted him for an impressive, convincing, successful insurance man. He has a large office of his own where he is boss and a nice big home where ah- some one else is Boss."

"Well, is everybody married?" I inquired aloud.

"Oh, no," laughed a dandy old dandelion's voice, "there's a good looking and dignified bachelor in our town. He is a successful lawyer and is much angled for, every girl that meets him is simply 'Carraway'-ed with him."

"Gracious, I wouldn't have thought that T. Luther would be a bachelor; now if he had said——"

"Whoo! whoo!" moaned the voice of an Owl.

"Why I would not have been so surprised if he had said Bill O'Donnell," I stammered.

"Bill O'Donnell? Do you mean Dr. William McGehee O'Donnell, A.B., D.D., Ph. D., President of Millsaps College? He is a very proper and dignified man, I assure you, as wise as myself, but he is not married — he still has that moustache you see and — but there I must tell of Dr. Harrison. He is well initiated in matrimony for he has been married for years and years — but he still flirts on the sly. He is head of the mathematical department of a girls' college."

I started to laugh at a funny thought I had just then, but was gently rebuked by a most dignified voice telling of Annie Lester, Dean of a great Woman's College and an example of goodness and honor to hundreds of girls.

"I always knew Annie would do something big," I mused.

"Well," said a saucy little voice, "I can tell of her who was Mary McAlpin. She married an artist, I will not say what kind of an artist, but you have heard of the art of cutting hair I'm sure. She still has her own way and intends to have it first, last, and forevermore."

"Mary, Mary, quite contrary," I hummed, "Mary and Frieda——"

"Frieda?" questioned a sweet fresh voice, "why Frieda married a skillful, celebrated Doctor. She is a perfect beauty and as sensible and level headed as ever.

Then "Chirp, chirp," and a little sparrow voice sang, "chirp chee, I'm going to tell you something you couldn't guess, chee hee! There's a little country storekeeper, happy as the Miller Dee. He whistles and sing and feeds me cracker crumbs, chee hee! And his sign cut in front reads J. D. Crisler (A.B.)."

Slowly there arose from the casket a rushing and whirling of great waters, telling of magnificent bridges, great canals and beautiful road ways, the works of W. B. Moore, who was fast becoming one of the world's leading civil engineers. Then in a softer, happier tone I could hear them singing of a lovely lady and a pretty bungalow that were the chief joy and delight of this rising young man.

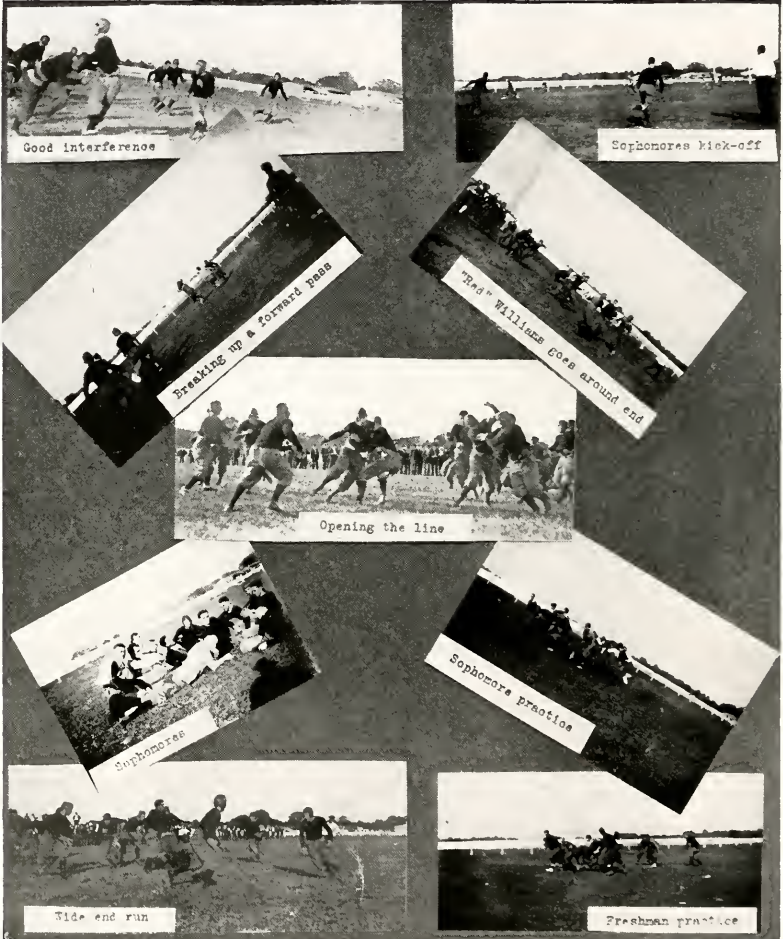

A loud voice then boomed forth, demanding attention, "Ahem," then in a most impressive manner it began, "among the most influential men in the United States Senate are the 'Two Senators from Mississippi,' L. F. Hendrick looming tall in all Washington politics and society, and the Hon. W. C. McLean occupying the largest seat in the Senatorial Chamber; and it will not be long before the Presidential bee in his bonnet will openly begin to buzz."

"Gracious," I sighed, "everybody seems to be accomplishing so much, I wish I could hear about me."

"So you shall," came from the casket. "Far out——" "Pax vobiscum," interrupted a monstrous little voice, "the midnight hour is almost gone, there is only a second or two to say that Bishop Sessions is extremely busy, and getting along finely. He and Mrs. Bishop are doing a great work. Pax vobiscum."

*And the midnight hour with its mystical lore
Closed tight the casket and passed on before.*

Morn

Look, now the mist fades into light,
The darkness, shade by shade, has gone.
The birds begin to take their flight,
And greet the day with song.

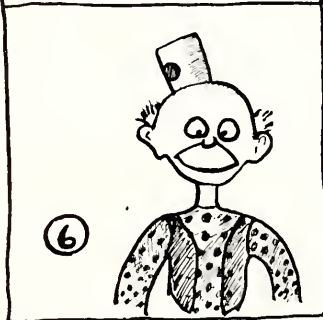

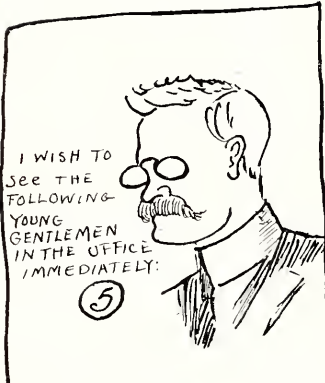

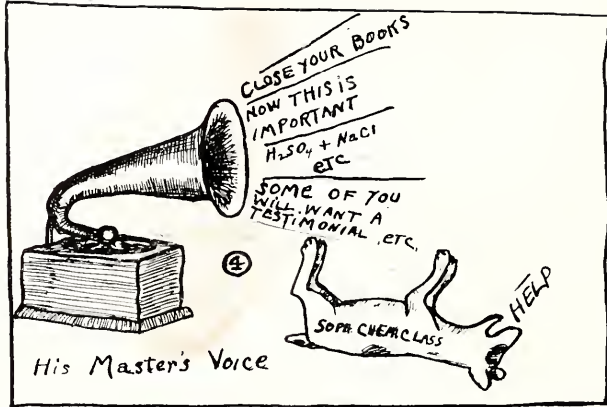

The sun peeps o'er the mountain;
The rays fall here and there.
The dew from Nature's fountain
Glistens everywhere.

The trees bow with a gentle breeze,
Bend gently forth and back again,
And thus give tidings to the world
Of the first warm day of Spring.

NOTES ON THE TEAM

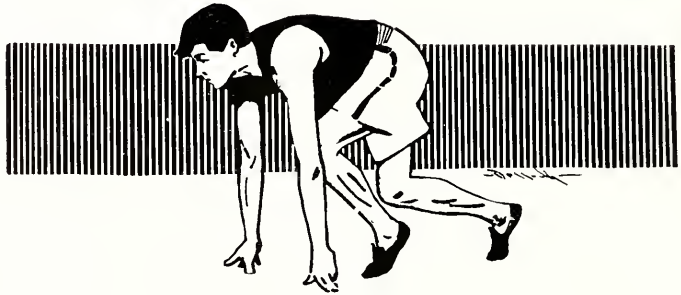

Vick was easily the star of the team last year. His fielding record was perfect and his batting average was over 500. Williams, also, had a perfect fielding record, and his batting was always opportune. Many games were won by a timely hit from the big left fielder. His batting average was 357. Summer batted 333, while Smith's average was 289. All four of these men are with us this year as the nucleus for another championship team.

Every man on the team last year worked hard and consistently; Smith's catching and the steady pitching of Taylor and Ward were especially commendable. Vick and Ward were selected for the all-Southern college team.
